Mr. Lincoln has certainly acted very strangely, and for very atrange motives, toward General McClellan. Very recently he signified, through a member of his Cabinet, to McClellan that if he would withdraw from would assign him to an important command. nrc. in his hands.

Earlier theu this, however, we find the same weak or neworthy motives governing the President. When he was engaged in depleting McCiellen's army at the dictation of the radicale, with the Secretary of War at their head, knowing that it would be daugerous or fa'al, he was continually writing miserable letters of excuse and spology to Mc Jelian, of which the following is the teno:: 'If you know the fall pressure of the case, I am confident you would justify it."

The full pressure was as we have said, and n obedience to it he was willing to overthrow cess of the campaign urgently demanded that grim and earnest. the plan should be sustained; but no, the Abolitionists, with no plan of their owe, were resolved to bresk down McClellan, and they used the President to effect their purpose, and after all his apologies for the dreadful results of yielding, is excused on account of the

We mean is the war a success in bring ing about the restoration of the Union? If so, what State has really been brought back by he war? Not Louislaus, with its one repre seatstive in Congress; not Virginia, which even a radical Congress would not so far ac knowledge as to allow it to have one Repre

It has not called a Legislature or sent Congressmen. The State is in so em- cise nature of the difficulty is not yet made inently an nusatisfactory condition that even Johnson has not attempted this. The only section that can be so claimed by

How long, if Teunessee is not yet in the How long, if Teunessee is not yet in the Union by one representative, will it be before the other ten States will return; and what is the nex of westing the prevent and blood of the war is to last another year let the Shenthe use of wasting the hravery and blood of our soldiers in what brings no valuable return whatever? That is the question.

The Abolitionists may be laughing be fore they are out of the woode. They belong to n crowd that gets glorious news at first and sorry accounts at the winding up. We know that they have not accupled to do anything that would win. What would otherwise be ticket this fall. unconstitutional may become lawful by becoming Indispensable, so says Mr. Lincoln, and his perty support it and set on it. They talk of the corrupt Democracy. The Demoarate do not profess to be any better then they ought to be, and hence they are the more to be trusted. The Abelitionists make great professions of patriotism and goodness. As usual, all those qualities exist only in words. The seif-righteous man is great on pretensions, and equally great in vices. No party in this country ever approximated the Abolition party in corrupions of all sorts; defalcations, swindlings, atcalings and other profitable practices are so ever. common and so complicated that on exposure

If they do not get a majority of the numbers returned somehow, so as to get the offices, it will be no credit to their skill in rascality, for they are willing soule; or, perhaps, their fallnre to succeed may be something to their credit. With all the means of success, may be they did scrupio a little.

We look for a fearful vote in Indiana. There are hardly men, women and children enough in the State to fill up such a list as the ballot will show, we presume. Last year Oblo had well nigh polled votes enough for two such States.

The victories they then claimed, and for which the General and the soldiers were thanked by Congress, were all defeate, or nomehow miserable follures. It Grant was not of their party, they would succr at all he has done sluce the commencement of his campaign. There is not an achievement they would not disparage.

Hooker is one of them, and they don't oneer at his fallures. Burnside is one of them, and they are highly pleased with him. They were the successors of McClellan, and the disastrons battles they fought are forgotten. Grant, up to this time, has lost four times as many men, and accomplished no more than McClellan, yet he was not caricatured and ridiculed. The fact is, the only real merit of a General

From what they write and publish, we should think they might know nothing without belonging to an organization for the purpose. It is true, however, that three-tourths of all their supporters belonged to that order in 1855, including their candidate for Pres'dent. It was, therefore, in order to add that many good men belonged to it. Perhaps they did; but it was no part of their goodness.

Grant has had a whole season of bloody work to get where is. How long before the faithful will begin to eneer at him? They will do it just as soon as they find he is mot devoted to party.

LOVE IN A COTTAGE. BY MARION POWELL

"A very pretty story, indeed! Yes, s beautiful picture—very romantic—very in-teresting—'Love in a Cottage!' Ah, me!' exclaims the sentimental young lady. "How delightful-what joy-what happi-

Then resting her fair head upon her lit-tle white hand, she sits and pictures to herself the perfect bliss of "Love in a Cot-

There it stands, as large as life; painted white, as pure as driven snow; pretty lit-tle bow windows opening on to a balcony in front; evergreens twining up the trelliswork; the garden is laid out with the greatest care; the choicest flowers are most tastefully arranged; refreshing and de-Rightful perfumes are wafted by the gentle breeze into the nest and pretty little

Look at the lace curtains, so gracefully looped up; see the little work-table and basket standing in the corner; there the piano, whose melodious tones greet the en-chanted ear. Look from the windowthere the long avenue of trees half hides the cottage from the rude and curions gaze of the passers-by; it seems to peep modest-ly out from among the trees. Listen to the sweet music of the birds; how joyously they sing; how happy they seem, as they jump from bough to bough.

And the occupants of that cottage—are they not happy? Does not Love dwell within? Does he not chase care and sorrow away with his fairy wand? See, now young girl steps out upon the balcony she watches for some one; her eye bright-ens as she catches sight of his form; she trips lightly down the steps, along the graveled pathway; she greets him with a sweet smile, with fond kisses. How trustingly she leans upon his arm: how joyingly-how confidingly she looks up into his face; how his eyes beam with love and pride when he gazes upon her lovely face and listens to her sweet voice, falling, like strains of de-licious music, upon his delighted ear.

Is it not a picture of happiness? Does that young bride dream while in that miniature garden of Eden—that Paradise on earth—that there is such a thing as sorrow—as misery in this world? Nol Love and joy reign; sanshine throws its radiant beams upon them. Can dark and stormy clouds cast their shadows o'er their path Can a relentless storm come to mar their perfect bliss? Can black clonds hovering over them burst like a flash of lightning or fall like a thunderbolt to crush their bright hopes? Little do they think of or imagine Let her dream on; that happy delusion will pass; aye, too soon.

The scene has faded away; the sentimental young lady is aroused; she is once more the merchant's daughter. The vision has fled; she heaves a deep-drawn sigh. Ah! the old story—an only daughter of a rich merchant in love with her music-master; parents furious; young lady heartbroken and "at war'twixt will and wili not." Oh, how happy she would be-so she thinksin that dear little cottage, putting the buttons on his shirts or darning his stockings, while he would sit and play to her! Oh, what bliss! Weil, I mus' confess that such a picture as she imagines would be decidedly charming. I can understand that she would be really very happy; and, what is more, she ought to be.

I should, however, like to whisper a few words into our young friend's ear; I should like to lift up that heavy curtain and let her father take a peep, if only one, at the scene it might be, and, in all probability, would be, in a short time.

Now, "Love in a Cottage" is, we think, without doubt, most delightful; but what says our romantic young lady to love in a "tchen or love in a garret? Now, don't a yay in that contemptuous manner; turn a. not so agreeable a picture, it for, though wite as true a one. But is nevertheless white as true a one. But she does not see it; ou, dark clouds pictured and dwelt upon; the dark clouds and teams are hidden behind the curtain.

Now, for instance, a few years hence, the eottage has vanished; well, we won't say, love with it, though I should not be at all surprised. Behold our fair friend in a smoky kitchen, surrounded by dirty greasy pots, and half a dozen little cherubs no less lirty, looking, in fact, as though being introduced to soap and water would mightily improve them; while she, a perfect wreck of her former self, looks from one to the other, and sighs. We don't much wonder at it—there is the dinner to be got ready, and all those dear little children to be washed, and a hundred other things to be done before he comes home.

Well, he comes in. Is dinner ready? It will be in a few minutes. He gives a Heaven with one-fold. grunt—not of satisfaction—he looks around At everything, then turns away in disgust.
Ah! you see his look! But do not blame him; he has just been giving a lesson in music to a beautiful and fashionable young girl, as much like what you once were as it is possible to be; he contrasts the dif-ference of the two homes and of what you are and of what you were—why has your wasted form lost all its grace? Why? but why ask all these questions? l'erhaps he asks himself what he saw in you to love? We don't eay he does. Well, you must remember he goes out, is constantly reminded of what it should have been; while you remain at home, and have not time to think.

Ah, yes! you feel the change as keenly

It is true he ought to remember i was for him you sacrificed all, and should try to lighten your burden with smiles and cheering words, instead of adding to it by frowns and sullen discontent; but alas! such is not man's nature.

You sigh, and well you may imagine the worst has not perhaps come—the garret is not yet reached.

We must mount still another flight; here we are at last, and if you don't mind sitting on a three-legged stool, or an empty box turned topsy turvy, you may take a seat and rest yourself, and if you cannot find anything better to amuse yourself count the broken windows stuffed with rage or paper, to keep out the cold; behold those sunken eyes and hollow cheeks; she was once acknowledged belle of a fashionable circle-envied by her own sex, adored by the opposite; while he, with the red and bloated face, was once the handsome musicmaster, who stole her heart, and-but you know the rest.

Now don't think we would disconrage love matches, far from it—there is but one thing to marry for, that is love, so say we; yet, we believe in girls having their eyes open, and not going into any state, the married state in particular, blindfolded. We do not believe in "marrying in haste and repenting at leisure." Just think over all you may have to go through, and then if you are still able to say, "I will," and that cheerfully, able to run the risk of not only "Love in a Cottage," but in a Pail Hage. kitchen and garret, we say well done, bravo, bravissimo-or, as the boys say now a-day, "Bully for you."

A Posen.-A little semi-pagan, who for the first time was receiving some religious instruction from a female friend whom he was visiting, found some difficulty in understanding that our Sunday had anything re-markable in it over any other day. At last, by dint of "line upon line and precept apon precept," he was made to comprehend somewhat of the sanctity of the Sabbath. Unfortunately, however, s. on after he began to understand things, coming from church one Sunday, he noticed the apothecary shops open. sense received a terrible shock, and he entered into a very orthodox denunciation of the unconscious compounder of simples.
"But," he was told, "the druggist must keep open on Sundays, so that the sick pecn get medicine.' "Why, do people get sick on Sunday?"

"Yes, just as much as any other day."
"Well, good people don't die on Sunday,

" Certainly." "How can that be? Does heaven keep Hugh Irvin's estate.....

open on Sunday?"

It is needless to say that all further conversation on the subject was impossible.
